DESCRIBE THE PI	RESENT AND ORI	GINAL (II kno	WA) PHYSICA	L APPEARANCE

Haw Branch plantation, located above the hawthorne lined stream of the same name, is approached by a country road winding several miles through The house is surrounded by cleared pastures and cultivated fields The exact appearance of the original structure is which slope to the east. not known, but apparently it was much smaller than the present large frame Portions of this original structure are believed to be incorporated into the present building which largely dates from the late eighteenth century. Formal in plan, the central five-bay block with hipped roof and exterior-end chimneys is flanked by symmetrical three-bay wings with hipped roofs. ground immediately surrounding the house is dug out to a depth of several feet and paved with brick. The house's English basement is laid in common bond below normal ground level and Flemish bond above. The walls above the brick are covered with beaded clapboards. On the central block, rectangular ornamental insets are employed on the south facade between the upper and There are modillion cornices on both the central block and the wings. Two gabled dormers project from the south slope and one from the north slope of the central block's roof. There is one dormer on the north slope of each of the wing roofs. The basement windows have three lights over six; all the others are six-over-six and have architrave trim The windows over the north and south doorways have sidewith molded sills. lights. Both doorways have an elliptical fanlight, sidelights and engaged The south doorway has tobacco leaves carved on the entablature immediately above the columns. A single-bay porch topped by a Chinese lattice railing shelters the south doorway. The entire first floor on the north side is sheltered by a shed roof veranda.

The most striking feature of the interior of Haw Branch is the finely detailed woodwork, thought to have been installed around 1815. the hall, elliptical arches with a molded keystone and stars in relief spring from symmetrically molded pilasters framing the north and south doorways and the division in the center of the spacious hall. Details of the pilasters are repeated on the doorways leading to the drawing rooms. Tobacco and oak leaf motifs occur below the consoles on the hall's interior doorways. A distinctive motif employed in the double drawing rooms (one of which is now used as the dining room) is the hawthorne blossom. In the east drawing room it appears on the mantel and on the frieze of the doorway, where it flanks festoons of drapery and an urn. The mantel in the west room includes the hawthorne motif, urns, a central stylized sunburst flanked by small fluted pilasters topped by festoons of drapery, and pilasters with a strong Egyptian influence. The frieze over the doorway opening from the west drawing room to the hall employs the hawthorn blossom. In the northeast leg of the hall an open string two-run stair with turned balusters and brackets ascends to the second floor. It is thought that the one-run stair to the basement incorporates certain elements of the original stair which was removed when the interior was remodelled in the early nineteenth century. The sunburst design features prominently in the wing room. A crown molding cornice and a chair rail are employed in all of the rooms on this floor. rooms on the second floor and those in the basement, including the original dining room, are much less elaborate, having simple unadorned trim on the mantels and doorways.

To the north of the house, the first row of an original three rows of dependencies remains. These three buildings include a structure known as

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

Haw Branch, the most significant Federal building is Amelia County, is distinguished by finely detailed interiors. Although its size and formality make it unusual in the provincial expression of the style in the area, the Federal interiors are the feature singling the structure out from its neighbors. For much of its history, the house has been connected with the prominent Tabb and Mason families, active in state and national affairs, friends with such celebrated citizens as John Randolph of Roanoke, a frequent visitor and a patron of the racecourse in the meadow east of the house. This, the handsome exterior, formal plan and finished interiors raise Haw Branch to an unique status in Amelia County.

Colonel Thomas Tabb purchased the nucleus of the land making up Haw Branch plantation in 1743. A small house, believed to be incorporated in the western part of the present house, appears in the record in 1748. The plantation grew, reaching 2700 acres by 1798. The house is thought to have been enlarged and given its present exterior appearance by John Tabb after the Revolutionary War. Marianna, daughter of John Tabb, married William Jones Barksdale, a partner in Gallego Mills in Richmond, then the largest flour mill in the U. S., in 1815. The present owners believe that the house was renovated and that the fine Federal interiors were installed at that time. Marianna Barksdale inherited Haw Branch from her father, and left it to her daughter, Harriet, wife of John Y. Mason. Secretary of the Navy under Presidents Tyler and Polk, and Attorney-General under Polk. The property remained in the Mason family until 1872, when it was purchased by a wealthy Englishman, M. M. Blacker, who operated the plantation as a model and experimental farm. The long north porch was added during this period. After 1903, the house passed through many hands until it was purchased and restored in 1965 by Mr. and Mrs. W. Cary McConnaughry, the latter being a descendant of Colonel Tabb.
